What are complete streets?

Roadways designed (or redesigned) and operated to enable safe access for all users.

Pedestrians, bicyclists, motorists and transit riders of all ages and disabilities must be able to safely move along and across a complete street.

Where do you want to live?

Or

Why build complete streets?

- 1/3 of Michigan residents do not drive- they are too young, elderly or have a disability.
- Recent surveys show that people want to use alternative transportation, but roadway design often makes it unpleasant or dangerous to do so.
- 13% of pedestrians and cyclists are involved in fatal traffic accidents, but states spend only 1.5% of their federal transportation dollars on pedestrian and bicycle projects.
- Complete streets are an important component of creating vibrant places where people want to live and businesses want to locate.

Did you know?

A March 2010 policy statement from the USDOT calls for the inclusion of walking and biking in transportation projects with particular attention paid to transit riders and people of all ages and abilities.

What do they look like?

There is no prescription for a complete street, but common features can include:

- Sidewalks
- Bike Lanes
- Wide Shoulders
- ADA Accessible Crosswalks & Ramps
- ADA Accessible Bus Stops & Shelters
- Pedestrian crossings at signalized intersections
- Bridges with non-motorized access

Complete Streets

Benefits:

- Create a livable community
- Spark economic revitalization
- Provide children, older adults and persons with disabilities with safe mobility options
- Promote healthy lifestyles
- Create connected transportation networks
- Make public transit safe and convenient
- Reduce air and water pollution

No! Complete streets are long-term investments. Implementing a proactive planning process and policies allows for projects to be accomplished with little or no extra cost.
